Episcopal Relief & Development works in over 40 countries, serving more than 3 million people annually through programs in four core areas. We work in partnership with local churches and organizations, both within the Anglican Communion and ecumenically. Our programs alleviate hunger, create economic opportunities, respond to disasters and fight diseases like HIV/AIDS and malaria. Together with our partners, we are healing a hurting world.

June 2012

One of the biggest health and environmental hazards in the developing world is smoke from cooking fires. Burning organic fuels like wood and animal droppings releases carbon and other compounds into the air, increasing air pollution and causing eye and respiratory disease. By replacing traditional stoves with ones that are enclosed and vent smoke outside the home, we are not only helping to save fuel – we are helping to save lives.
